CONSTRUCTION

Interior Designing and Interior Decorating are two very different fields which are commonly mistaken for the other. The Designer creates space and the Decorator enhances it.

An Interior Designer co-ordinates from the blue print till the execution/ completion of the project.

Limited space for construction requires optimum usage of available space. The most effective use of space, user well-being factor, functionality of the layout and co-ordination with developers are the most important aspects of Interior designing.

In the past, interiors were put together instinctively as part of the process of building as per the needs and requirements of the stakeholders or developers. Time and space constraints have developed Interior designing into a science. For example an Interior Designer will have the talent and acumen to fit in a small closet or loft or a washroom into a room when it seems impossible to a layman without compromising on usable space.

The profession of Interior Designing is so vast and has many verticals and it has branched out into specialist designers. There are different Interior Designers for apartments, houses, commercial blocks, offices, hospitals, hotels, schools etc

In India Vasthu is a very important aspect in construction. As such the Interior designer is required to guide the erectors of the building on the basic requirements of Vasthu.

FALSE CEILING

The trend of flat and simple ceilings have fallen wayside. Because people nowadays are eyeing on products that make the typical flat ceiling look attractive but with minimal costing.

So with the recent surge of false ceiling it has become easier for people to embellish the beauty of any space whether it be an office, commercial complex, residential complex or theatres.

False ceilings are often secondary ceilings that are hung below the main ceiling with the help of suspension cords or struts. These ceilings are crafted from a wide range of materials such as POP (plaster of Paris), gypsum board, asbestos sheets, particle board, aluminium panel, wood etc. They are also known as dropped ceiling or suspended ceiling.

The classification is totally based on 3 criteria:

- Place of application
- Ambience needed
- Economy available

The lighting scheme of a room can make or break how it feels to live in the space. Deciding on your lighting scheme is an essential part of the home design process because it needs to be thought out and detailed on the detailed design drawings

With the right lighting any home can feel bright and pleasant, even in the gloomiest days of winter. Countless lighting choices today make the whole search energy - consuming, so categorizing the lighting you need in task, accent in ambient is a great way to make your search more organized as it helps you make the choices more easily. Interior lighting design for homes is one important thing that can be brought to the max with just a couple of tips.

LIGHTING DESIGN

It's best to have a combination of different types of lighting at hand in order to set the mood you want. Don't forget the task lighting which is essential for doing all you plan on doing in the room, whether it's reading, drawing or even just picking out clothes.

Try layering the lighting in order to create a perfect mix of different kinds of lighting with different sources. A good way to multiply this lighting is to add mirrors that will reflect it.

There are countless types of lighting you can find these days – from the eco-friendly fluorescents and LED to the new and improved in-floor light strips, lighting technology has really prospered and given us a huge variety of products to choose from.

With this technology, one can bring attention to any detail they want to highlight in their home. You can hide any spot you don't want gaining attention and bring light to the ones you do.

WALL PAINTING

External Painting is done on the outer walls of houses to protect it from environmental damages like UV rays, dust particles etc. Painting are of different kinds and it depends on the clients, which they prefer depending on the quality and cost of the paints to be used in the the Project. We have a great knowledge regarding various types of paints.

We have a very good Experience in Exterior Painting Works. Our clients are extremely Satisfied by our Work and the quality of Service which we provide. We not only give best service to customers in keeping the choices but also help them to know better options.

Types of paint finishes used for exterior house painting are just as important as the colors, materials and surface preparation - because they too affect the final result.

Flat paint finish is the most porous of the three and doesn't reflect light. For this reason, it works great for painting older houses - it can help hide many flaws and imperfections on the walls.

Satin Finish

Satin paint finish is the most popular among homeowners - it is neither dull nor shiny and has a subtle sheen that is ideal for painting walls.

Gloss Finish

Gloss paint finish is the toughest and easiest to clean, but must be used sparingly.
